

PHASE 2 · FACILITATOR & TRAINING-OF-TRAINERS MANUAL

How to use The Field Guide

A companion manual for facilitators and master trainers: how to run the ImaarishaSRHR Strategic Comms & Reframing toolkit — in a workshop, a community session, or a training of trainers — using the interactive Field Guide and its printed job-aids.

Companion to the Strategic Comms & Reframing SRHR field guide

The guide teaches through people we come to know. This manual teaches you to hold the room while they do.

What the Field Guide is — and what this manual adds

The Field Guide is the ImaarishaSRHR Strategic Comms & Reframing toolkit, delivered as a living, interactive resource rather than a document to read once and shelve. It is built around a single Kenyan family — the Achiengs — so every framework arrives inside a scene you can picture, from a person the room comes to know. This manual is the facilitator's companion: it does not repeat the guide's content, it shows you how to run it with a group so the learning sticks and travels.

The resource in one page

WHAT IT IS	HOW IT REACHES PEOPLE
Eight modules — seven strategy modules (the system, disinformation, culture & patriarchy, reframing, what works, the operating system, and the Mother & Auntie frontier) plus a full Mother & Auntie facilitator curriculum. Each module ends in one working tool.	Two tracks from one source. A digital app (installable, works offline, on phone or desktop) for interactive use; and printed one-page job-aids with QR codes that bridge paper back to the tools and audio — so it works in a clinic with no data just as well as on a phone.

Everything in the guide is drawn from a triangulated Phase 1 evidence base. As a facilitator you do not need to master the evidence — you need to run the scenes and the tools, and let the family carry the argument.

ENTRY POINTS — WHEN TO REACH FOR WHICH TRACK

- In a workshop with smartphones or a projector — use the app: open a module, run its interactive tool live, project the reframing worksheet or the disinformation quiz for the whole room.
- In a community session, kitchen or clinic corner — use the printed job-aids and character cards; the QR lets anyone who wants to go deeper open the tool or the audio later.
- For self-paced learning — send a partner the app link; the progress tracker remembers where they stopped.

Who facilitates, and who it is for

AUDIENCE	WHAT THEY TAKE FROM IT
SRHR organisations & their staff	The strategy modules as team training: the evidence, the framework, and a tool each person can run in a real campaign.
Community mobilisers, CHPs, peer educators	The scenes and tools for group sessions; the Mother & Auntie curriculum for working with older women.
Champion aunties & faith allies	The Mother & Auntie field cards — a script they can carry into the kitchen and the WhatsApp group.

Master trainers (this manual's core reader)

How to cascade all of the above to new facilitators through a training of trainers.

Five principles that hold the room

These are the non-negotiables. They come straight from the evidence on what changes minds in Kenyan SRHR — and from the guide's own commitment that no one in the family is a villain.

Never shame the messenger. Beth, Silas, Tom and Cucu all act out of love and duty. The moment a participant feels judged for what they were taught, the door closes. The arc you are facilitating is conversion, not defeat.

Teach through people, not bullet points. Always open on the scene before the framework. "Agneta is afraid a pregnancy will end school" lands where "multi-dimensional barriers" does not. Let the room meet the person first.

Lead with the value they already hold. Health, family, provision, protection — arrive at rights from there. Model in the room the reframing you are teaching: you are the first trusted messenger they meet.

Replace, don't just remove. It is not enough to say a belief is wrong. Every time you retire a line ("marry by 20"), you must hand the room a new line to carry in its place.

Make it safe to be uncertain. Participants carry real fear and real faith. Invite questions without a "right answer" performance; the tools are there to think with, not to test people.

The session shape — one rhythm, every module

Every module is built to be run the same way. Learn this five-beat rhythm once and you can facilitate any module — and teach others to.

BEAT	WHAT YOU DO	ROUGHLY
1 • Arrive on the scene	Read the opening scene aloud, or play the character clip. Ask: "Who recognises this?"	5 min
2 • Surface the idea	Draw the core idea out of the room before you name it. Then show two or three figures, no more.	10 min
3 • Run the tool	Open the module's interactive tool. Do it together — map the forces, spot the signals, build a reframe live.	15 min
4 • Practise	Participants apply the tool to their own work or family: rewrite a real warning, reframe a real message.	15 min
5 • Commit	Each person names one thing they will do differently. Capture it — this is what turns a session into a habit.	5 min

YOUR FACILITATOR KIT FOR EVERY SESSION

- The Field Guide open on the module (app) or its printed job-aid.
- A way to capture commitments — flip chart, shared note, or the WhatsApp group.

- The character cast in view, so the room keeps meeting the same faces.
- One real example from the participants' own context, ready to reframe.

Running a Training of Trainers

The Field Guide is designed to cascade: master trainers train facilitators, who run sessions in their own organisations and communities. A training of trainers (ToT) does two things at once — it teaches the content, and it teaches the facilitation. Everything you model, they will copy.

The cascade, in three tiers

TIER	WHO	WHAT THEY CAN DO AFTER
Master trainer	Runs the ToT (this manual's reader).	Certify facilitators; adapt sessions; hold quality.
Facilitator	Org staff, mobilisers, peer educators.	Run any module with a group; recruit champion aunties.
Champion / peer	Aunties, youth creators, faith allies, survivors.	Carry re-scripted messages through their own trusted channels.

A two-day ToT agenda

Two days is enough to take a new facilitator from meeting the family to running a module unsupervised. Keep groups small (12–16), keep devices in the room, and make every participant facilitate at least once.

WHEN	SESSION	GOAL
Day 1 • AM	Meet the family; the two-track guide; the five principles; the session rhythm.	They can name the stance and the shape.
Day 1 • PM	Modules 1–3 run in full, master-trainer led; participants take notes as facilitators, not students.	They have seen the rhythm three times.
Day 2 • AM	Modules 4–6 and the Mother & Aunty frontier; participants co-facilitate in pairs.	They have facilitated with support.
Day 2 • PM	The Mother & Aunty curriculum; each participant runs one module solo (micro-teach); feedback; commitments & certification.	They can run a module alone.

THE MICRO-TEACH — THE HEART OF THE TOT

- Give each participant one module and 20 minutes to run its five beats with the group.
- Observe against the five principles, not against content recall.
- Feedback names one strength and one specific adjustment — modelled kindly, exactly as you want them to treat participants.
- Certify a facilitator when they can open on a scene, run the tool, and close on a commitment — without shaming anyone.

Facilitation notes, module by module

For each module: the scene to open on, the point to reach, how to run the tool with and without devices, and the pitfall to avoid. These are prompts, not scripts — the words should be yours.

1 • The System — one girl, four forces

Open on: Agneta pressed at once by her father, the pulpit, a WhatsApp forward and a backlash.

The point: The barrier is one machine — patriarchy, culture, religion and disinformation turn together, so single-dimension campaigns slip.

With devices: Run “Map the Machine”: tap each of the four forces and read how it presses on Agneta.

Without devices: Draw Agneta at the centre of a flip chart; write the four forces around her; ask the room how each one works.

Pitfall: Don’t let it become four separate problems — keep returning to how they reinforce each other.

2 • Disinformation — the tilted environment

Open on: The family WhatsApp group lights up with “family planning causes cancer — share before it’s deleted.”

The point: You cannot fact-check your way out; the skill is prebunking — naming the manipulation signals before the next forward.

With devices: Run “Spot the tell-tale signs”: the room taps the four signals in a real-shape forward.

Without devices: Print the forward; hand out four cards (anonymous source, fake authority, fear hook, false urgency); match words to cards.

Pitfall: Don’t debate whether the myth is true — that spreads it. Name the trick, not the claim.

3 • Culture & Patriarchy — the cost of a choice

Open on: Tom finds Grace’s hidden pills; the cost of a woman’s choice becomes visible, and high.

The point: Shaming men rarely lowers the cost; what shifts things is reducing the cost of her decision — quieter, safer, socially backed.

With devices: Run “Cost her decision”: switch on supports and watch the cost fall.

Without devices: List Grace’s supports on cards; add them one by one and ask, “Is it easier for her to choose now?”

Pitfall: Don’t turn the men in the room into the enemy — frame as provision and shared decisions.

4 • Reframing — the frame beats the fact

Open on: The same facts rebuilt to reach Tom (provision) and Beth (protecting Agneta), voiced by the nurse they trust.

The point: Lead with a held value and arrive at rights: health is the entry point, rights the destination.

With devices: Run “The Reframing Worksheet” live: pick an audience and watch the five-part message build.

Without devices: Use the printed worksheet: five boxes — Value, Bridge, Fact, Messenger, Ask — on one real message.

Pitfall: Don’t skip the messenger. A perfect reframe in the wrong mouth still fails.

5 • What Works — proof to stand on

Open on: The corner that changes things: the nurse’s youth desk, Kevo’s clip, the pastor turned ally, Brenda’s story.

The point: Match channel and messenger to the audience honestly — digital reaches youth, radio reaches the unreached, peers carry trust.

With devices: Run the “Channel & messenger matrix”: pick an audience, get the evidence-backed pairing.

Without devices: Print the matrix as a grid; have the room place their real audiences and argue the pairings.

Pitfall: Don’t default to “make a video.” Ask who you need to reach before you choose the channel.

6 • The Operating System — five habits

Open on: The guide only works if it becomes routine — five weekly habits, not a document in a drawer.

The point: Turn the toolkit into standing practice: listening rota, message library, messenger map, a 30-second framing check, a monthly review.

With devices: Run “The Five Habits” self-assessment: each team checks what it already does.

Without devices: Print the five habits as a wall poster; the team marks its baseline and picks the next to adopt.

Pitfall: Don’t leave it abstract — assign an owner to each habit before the session ends.

7 • Mother & Aunty (Part 1) — the frontier

Open on: In the kitchen, Agneta confides her fear to Beth, who answers with love and “marry by 20.”

The point: Older women are the highest-leverage, least-used point; the most trusted channel carries the most misinformation. The battleground is norms.

With devices: Run “Rewrite the warning”: keep Beth’s love, change what she passes on.

Without devices: Two columns on the flip chart — “what Beth says” and “what Beth could say” — fill the second together.

Pitfall: Don’t caricature the aunty. She is the future champion, not the problem.

8 · Mother & Aunty (Part 2) — the curriculum

Open on: Beth doesn't need a lecture; she needs a path from certain gatekeeper to the family's strongest champion.

The point: The hands-on curriculum: recruit champion aunties, move them along the gatekeeper → champion pathway, interrupt the transfer respectfully.

With devices: Walk the pathway stepper and flip the Myth & Fact cards; use the five-session outline to plan a cohort.

Without devices: Print the Champion Aunty card and Myth & Fact cards; run the five sessions face-to-face over five weeks.

Pitfall: Don't rush the pathway. Trust is built peer-to-peer, one doubt at a time.

Cascading the Mother & Aunty curriculum

This is where the guide's leverage concentrates. You are not delivering facts to older women — you are recruiting and equipping champions who will carry re-scripted messages through channels no campaign can reach: the kitchen, the family WhatsApp group, the gathering, the doorstep.

The gatekeeper → champion pathway

STAGE	WHERE THE AUNTY IS	WHAT MOVES HER ON
0 • Gatekeeper	Certain and protective; passes the warnings on as settled truth.	Not a stranger's facts — a trusted peer's single doubt.
1 • Unsettle	One crack: "my niece's nurse said different."	No confrontation; curiosity, not correction.
2 • Try	Tests one new line quietly; sees a girl respected, not shamed.	A safe first success she can repeat.
3 • Adopt	Changes her own advice; walks a girl to the clinic.	Recognition as a champion; the field cards in her hand.

Recruiting the right champions

- Respected, warm, and already influential in the family or women's group — not the loudest, the most trusted.
- An admin or elder in a family WhatsApp group is gold: she already holds a channel.
- Willing to be curious in public — the recruit who says "I never thought of it that way" will carry others.

The five sessions

SESSION	FOCUS	WHAT HAPPENS
1	Our role, and our love	Honour the participants' role; surface — without judging — the advice they currently give. Take-home: notice one piece of advice you hear this week.
2	What we were told, and what is true	With a trusted clinician: separate the love (right) from the facts (wrong); replace myths without shame. Take-home: the Myth & Fact card; pick one myth to stop repeating.
3	Keep the love, change the facts	Turn corrected facts into caring-aunty language. Rewrite two of your own warnings into new scripts, on cards.
4	Carrying it — the kitchen and the phone	Practise the new scripts face-to-face and in the family WhatsApp group; problem-solve pushback. Take-home: use one script for real, forward one accurate voice note.

5

Becoming a champion

Move from private change to public championing; capture change-of-heart stories (with consent); the pledge, a champions' WhatsApp group, a monthly check-in.

Facilitating offline, and knowing it is working

Much of your reach will be in rooms with no reliable data. The two-track design means the app and the paper are the same content, and the QR codes are the bridge between them.

MAKING THE TWO TRACKS WORK TOGETHER

- Install once, use anywhere. Install the app over wifi; it then runs fully offline in the field, tools and all.
- Print the job-aids. Each module folds to a one-page aid; the Mother & Aunty module folds to the Champion Aunty and Myth & Fact cards.
- Let the QR do the bridging. A participant scans the code on paper to open that exact module — or its audio — when they next have data.

Knowing it is working

You do not need a research team to see change. Watch for realistic intermediate signs — the same ones the strategy measures, at the size of a room.

- Script adoption — a participant repeats a re-scripted line back in their own words, unprompted.
- Content shift — the messages your trained facilitators put out start leading with value, not with "rights".
- Service-seeking — a champion reports walking a girl to the clinic, or a quieter, safer conversation at home.
- Prebunking reflex — someone names the trick in a new forward before anyone debates the claim.

Record these as stories, not just numbers. One champion aunty's account of changing her advice is worth more to the next cohort than a percentage — and it becomes the next session's opening scene.

Do and don't

DO	DON'T
Open on a person and a scene.	Open on a definition or a statistic.
Lead with a value the room already holds.	Lead with "rights", or with what people do wrong.
Hand over a new line to replace the old one.	Leave a belief demolished with nothing in its place.
Run the tool together, then let them practise.	Demonstrate the tool and move on without practice.
Treat the aunty, uncle and father as future allies.	Turn anyone in the family — or the room — into the villain.
Close every session on a concrete commitment.	End on "any questions?" with nothing captured.

APPENDIX

A one-day introductory workshop

When you have a single day rather than a full ToT, this agenda gives a team a working grasp of the guide and one tool they will actually use on Monday.

TIME	SESSION
09:00	Meet the Achieng family; the two-track guide; the five principles.
10:00	Module 1 (The System) and Module 2 (Disinformation), run in full.
11:30	Module 4 (Reframing) — the worksheet, applied to the team's real messages.
13:30	Modules 7 & 8 (Mother & Aunty) — the frontier and the champion pathway.
15:00	Module 6 (The Operating System) — assign the five habits to owners.
16:00	Commitments: each person names one change; set the next check-in.

Facilitator's pre-session checklist

- The app installed on your phone, and tested offline, before you travel.
- Printed job-aids for the modules you will run, plus the Mother & Aunty cards.
- One real message or warning from the participants' own context, ready to reframe.
- A way to capture commitments, and a date for the follow-up.
- The cast in the room — printed or on screen — so the family stays present.

REMEMBER

You are the first trusted messenger the room meets. The way you hold the family — with respect, patience and belief in their conversion — is the method. Facilitate the guide the way it asks Beth to be treated, and the room will carry it exactly that way to the next.

Respectfully. Relentlessly. Together.
